

Media release: ACBRI's publications are nationally significant
National Library of Australia archives ACBRI

06/06/17

The Australia-China Belt and Road Initiative is proud to announce that the National Library of Australia archived our website and publications as 'nationally significant' documents for Australia and its people; for future generations of Australia and the Australian community.

"The origins of the National Library of Australia go back to the early years after Australian Federation in 1901, when the Commonwealth Parliamentary Library served both Federal Parliament and the nation" (NLA.GOV.AU).

"PANDORA, Australia's Web Archive was established by the National Library in 1996 and is a collection of historic online publications relating to Australia and Australians. Online publications and web sites are selected for inclusion in the collection with the purpose of providing long-term and persistent access to them" (PANDORA.NLA.GOV.AU).

"PANDORA is a selective archive. The National Library and its partners do not attempt to collect all Australian online publications and web sites, but select those that they consider are of significance and to have long-term research value."

'We cannot understand the present or plan for the future without the knowledge of the past.'

Prime Minister Harold Holt, Stone Ceremony March 1966

ACBRI's reports have also become part of the University of Melbourne's teaching material, and consulting services materials across all sectors across Australia.

<End>

For further information please visit ACBRI's website www.acbri.org.au or email Chief Executive Ms Jean Dong at Jean.Dong@acbri.org.au.